June 30, 1960.

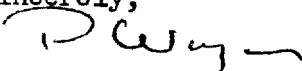

My dear Mr. Dulles:

My last conversation with you was so very helpful that I am wondering whether it might be possible for me to slip over again next week, if you are not too busy. My free days are Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. I can make it as early in the morning as you wish, if that is the good time for you.

Since talking to you last, I have had a month in Europe including nine fascinating days in Moscow, where of course we have our own correspondent, our Soviet-provided translator, and our Soviet-provided chauffeur.

A secondary reason for wishing to call on you is that we have bottled our 1959 Red wine, and it is the closest thing to a Beaujolais, I think, that has so far been produced in this country. I want you to try it.

Sincerely,

Philip M. Wagner,
Editor.
